

✓ As, As if, As Though, Like: Use as in a comparison (not like) when there is an equality intended or when the meaning is "in the function of."

Celia acted as (not like) the leader when the group was getting organized.

[Celia = leader]

Use as if or as though for the subjunctive.

He spent his money as if [or as though] he were rich.

Use like in a comparison (not as) when the meaning is "in the manner of" or "to the same degree as."

The boy swam like a fish.

Don't use like as the opening word in a clause in formal writing.

Informal: Like I thought, he was unable to predict the weather.

Formal: As I thought, he was unable to predict the weather.

✓ As, As if, As Though, Like: Use as in a comparison (not like) when there is an equality intended or when the meaning is "in the function of."

Celia acted as (not like) the leader when the group was getting organized.

[Celia = leader]

Use as if or as though for the subjunctive.

He spent his money as if [or as though] he were rich.

Use like in a comparison (not as) when the meaning is "in the manner of" or "to the same degree as."

The boy swam like a fish.

Don't use like as the opening word in a clause in formal writing.

Informal: Like I thought, he was unable to predict the weather.

Formal: As I thought, he was unable to predict the weather.